It is important to note that the results of this study are based on a cross-sectional design. Therefore, the causal relationship between the variables cannot be definitively established. Future research should consider longitudinal studies to explore the temporal dynamics of these relationships.

1997). The authors suggest that the use of a single, standardized measure of self-esteem may not be sufficient to capture the complexity of self-esteem in different cultures. They argue that self-esteem is a multifaceted construct that may be influenced by a variety of factors, including social norms, cultural values, and individual experiences. Therefore, they recommend that researchers use multiple measures of self-esteem to capture its complexity and to ensure that the results are valid and reliable across different cultures.

As a consequence, a statistically significant positive correlation was found between the number of years spent in the military and the number of years spent in the civilian sector. This result is consistent with the hypothesis that military service is a valuable experience that can be transferred to the civilian sector.

As the program continues, participants learn to identify and understand the various types of stressors that can affect their health and well-being. They are also taught how to recognize the signs and symptoms of stress and how to develop effective coping strategies to manage stress. The program includes a variety of activities, such as group discussions, role-playing, and self-reflection exercises, to help participants apply the concepts they are learning to their own lives. By the end of the program, participants should have a better understanding of stress and its effects, and be equipped with the skills and knowledge to manage stress effectively.
